Standard 2.5: Articles of the Constitution and the Bill of Rights

Summarize the Preamble and each Article in the Constitution, and the Rights Enumerated in the Bill of Rights; explain the reasons for the addition of the Bill of Rights to the Constitution in 1791. (Massachusetts Curriculum Framework for History and Social Science) [8.T2.5]

FOCUS QUESTION: What are the Articles of the Constitution and What Rights are in the Bill of Rights?
The Constitution establishes the legal and structural framework of the United States government. Written in secret, behind closed doors guarded by sentries, during the Constitutional Convention in Philadelphia in 1787, it is the oldest and shortest of all the world’s national constitutions. It was originally 4,543 words, including signatures; now with its 27 amendments, it is 7,591 words in length (Constitution of the United States: Fascinating Facts about the U.S. Constitution).

The Constitution set forth the following primary ideas about government (Six Big Ideas in the Constitution):

- Limited government
- Republicanism
- Separation of Powers
- Checks and Balances
- Popular Sovereignty
• Federalism

By 1777, ten states had drafted and adopted their own constitutions. These constitutions stressed the rights of individuals including freedom of religion, a lack of property requirements to vote, and power of government derived from the people. Concerns over the power of the new government and the desire to ensure and protect the rights of individuals led to the inclusion of the Bill of Rights, the Constitution’s first 10 amendments.

Constitution Day and Citizenship Day: September 17

Constitution Day and Citizenship Day is celebrated every September 17 to commemorate the signing of the Constitution on September 17, 1787 and to “recognize all who, by coming of age or by naturalization, have become citizens” (Library of Congress; 36 USC 106: Constitution Day and Citizenship Day).

The idea for a Constitution Day began in 1939 with the newspaper publisher William Randolph Hearst whose advocacy for a way to celebrate American citizenship led to the creation in 1940 of “I Am An American Day.” The efforts of two women then enlarged the scope of the idea. Olga T. Weber of Louisville, Ohio petitioned Congress to establish September 17 as the official date and to call the celebration, Citizenship Day. Louise Leigh founded an organization that led to the creation of Constitution Day as an official holiday in 2004.

On Constitution Day, it is expected that every educational institution, including K-12 schools, that receives federal funds will provide resources and conduct programs for students about the Constitution. But what should schools teach students? The Zinn Education Project’s “Whose ‘More Perfect Union’?” and “The Constitutional Convention: Who Really Won?” explores hidden histories and untold stories about the nation’s founding Constitution. One of the Project’s role plays asks students to imagine what might have happened had poor farmers, workers, and enslaved Africans attended the Constitutional Convention along with bankers, lawyers, merchants, and plantation owners (24 of the original 55 delegates owned slaves).

The U.S. Constitution is not the country’s only constitution - each state has its own constitution. There have been nearly 150 state constitutions which have been amended 12,000 times (NBER/Maryland State Constitutions Project). Comparing and contrasting state constitutions at the time of the American Revolution can be a powerful learning experience for students, an idea suggested by teacher Isabelle Morley.

Here are links to the Pennsylvania State Constitution of 1776 (widely regarded as the most democratic of state constitutions) and the South Carolina State Constitution of 1776 (regarded as perhaps the least democratic of state constitutions). What differences do you see in the ideas and structures of democracy set forth in these documents?

Constitution Writing Around the Globe

"Laws govern people; constitutions govern governments," noted historian Jill Lepore (2021, p. 75). Prior constitutions (i.e., Hammurabi's Code, the Magna Carta), Lepore continued, were hardly read by anyone, in part because so few people could read. The printing press, newspapers, and growing literacy among people meant that the United States constitution became part of how Americans understood their system of government.

The writing of a constitution, as historian Linda Colley shows in her book The Gun, the Ship, and the Pen (2021), was a momentously revolutionary development in global history. For most of human history, rulers (kings, emperors, warlords) ruled without any written limits on their powers. The American Revolution, the ideals set forth in the Declaration of Independence, and framework of government established at the Constitutional Convention set forth a era of constitution-writing across the globe.

Three forces, in Colley's view, propelled the constitution writing process across the globe: 1) the Gun, where it led to the breakdown of existing regimes; 2) the Ship, which made possible the sharing of democratic ideas across the world; and 3) the Pen, which along with a... rise in literacy, enabled writers to share new ways of thinking with increasingly larger numbers of people. Yet, constitutions do not always support democracy or expand rights and liberties for all people. The U.S. Constitution and those of many 19th century state constitutions, for example, denied rights to enslaved people and members of indigenous tribes as well as women (Lepore, 2021). Indeed, the struggle to realize the ideals of democracy set forth in the U.S. Constitution continues today.

Between 1791 and 1804, Haiti became the "first independent nation in the Caribbean, the second democracy in the western hemisphere, and the first black republic in the world" (History of Haiti, Brown University Library).

Haitian Constitution of 1801 and the Haitian Constitution of 1805 offer a fascinating instance of a country adopting a constitution and then replacing it with a considerably more radical one within the span of four years.

- Give students the two constitutions, but do not tell them which came first. Have students read the two documents and offer explanations for the differences.

The first ten amendments to the U. S. Constitution—the Bill of Rights—set forth the rights and freedoms of citizens living in the United States.
The first 10 Amendments of the Bill of Rights are:

1. Freedom of speech, press, petition, religion, and peaceful protest
2. The right to bear arms
3. No quartering of troops
4. No unreasonable search and seizure
5. Due process, no self incrimination, no double jeopardy
6. Right to a speedy trial
7. Trial by Jury
8. No cruel or unusual punishment
9. Rights of individuals not outlined in the Bill of Rights
10. Any powers not vested in the federal government are granted to the states and the people

The national Bill of Rights has inspired numerous other bills of rights related to economic life, education, health care, shopping and buying, voting and more:

- Franklin Roosevelt's Economic Bill of Rights (1944)
- GI Bill of Rights (Servicemen's Readjustment Act (1944)
- Patients Bill of Rights (adopted 1995)
- Student Bill of Rights (National Student Association, 1947)
- Consumer Bill of Rights (1962)
- People with Disabilities' Bill of Rights (1975)
- Voters Bill of Rights (from Democratic National Committee)
- Taxpayer Bill of Rights (1996)
- Health Care Bill of Rights (2019)
- The Human Right to Water in California (2012)
- Weingarten Rights (1975)
- PreK-12 Education Support Professionals (ESP) Bill of Rights, Massachusetts Teachers Association

These Bills of Rights outline the protections that every member of a free and democratic society should expect to have in their life.
Rights are subject to interpretation and political debates. Individual rights (life, liberty, property) and social and economic rights (health care, education, housing) have different meanings for different people and political parties. Conservative political groups and Republicans tend to define rights as individual rights while progressive and liberal groups and Democrats tend to expand individual rights to include social and economic rights (for example, Franklin Roosevelt’s Second Bill of Rights).

When the Bill of Rights were drafted there were no systems of mass communication - no social media, no television, no streaming services. But what if Twitter had been around at that time? Today, about one in five adults use Twitter, sending some 500 million tweets each day (Twitter by the Numbers, Omnicore, January 6, 2021). How would you have helped James Madison and the other members of Congress spread the word about the Bill of Rights on Twitter?

2.UNCOVER: W.E.B. Du Bois, the Niagara Movement, and the History of the NAACP

Born in 1868 and raised in Great Barrington, Massachusetts, W.E.B. DuBois was an immensely influential African American educator, writer, activist, and scholar. He was born just before the passage of the 14th Amendment and he lived nearly a century until just one day before the 1963 March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom.

Du Bois was one of the founders of the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) in 1909. His 1935 historical study, Black Reconstruction in America, placed “the struggles and triumphs of African Americans at the center of the Reconstruction story” (Gates, 2019, p. 255). His book, The Souls of Black Folks, sold nearly 20,000 copies between 1903 and 1940. The book contains the famous phrase, “the problem of the Twentieth Century is the problem of the color-line.”

Du Bois was also the founding editor of The Crisis, the official magazine of the NAACP. The first issue appeared in October, 1910.

W.E.B. DuBois’ life and writings, said Henry Louis Gates (2019), “often set the terms of the civil rights debate” and “his critique of white supremacy was insistent” (p. 254).

Read a short biography at NAACP History: W.E.B. Du Bois.

The Niagara Movement (founded by W.E.B. Du Bois and William Trotter in 1905) and the NAACP were political organizations formed to oppose racial segregation and political disenfranchisement of African Americans and to realize the goals of equality for African Americans. In The Niagara Movement's Declaration of Principles (1905), Du Bois declared: "We want full manhood suffrage and we want it now... We are men! We want to be treated as men. And we shall win."
The NAACP set forth a belief in using nonviolent protests and legal actions as the most effective way to achieve full and equal rights for African Americans. In the 1950s and 1960s, civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. lead the practice of nonviolent resistance against segregation and discrimination faced by African Americans in the United States.

W.E.B. Du Bois and Infographics

The African American sociologist and historian W.E.B. Du Bois was a pioneer in the field of data visualization.
Beginning in 1897, while at Atlanta University, Du Bois, together with students in his sociology lab, began producing full-color maps, charts, graphs, and tables about African American life in the post-Civil War United States. He drew his graphics by free hand printing and coloring. His work dramatically demonstrated both Black progress since slavery and the persistence of institutionalized White racism.

You can view many of these at How a Collection of 1900s W.E.B. Du Bois Infographics Set Out to Refute Racism.

An infographic is a visual display of information, which generally includes a chart, graph, map, diagram, or illustration. An infographic can be static or interactive. Interactive infographics allow viewers to interact with the content of the infographic and learn through inquiry (see Lunar cycle and sleep interactive infographic).

Today, digital tools, such as Piktochart, Easel.ly, and Canva make the design of infographics possible without any graphic design or drawing skills needed. As such, infographics are a popular tool for individuals and organizations who need to convey information in a way that is easy to understand. There are many ways infographics are used, such as hurricane/tsunami trackers, earthquake monitors, fire and smoke maps from wildfires, and COVID-19 pandemic infection and hospitalization rates.

At the same time, visual displays of data can be confusing and sometimes intentionally biased and false. More than two decades ago, information theorist Edward Tufte (2001) referred to messy, distorted presentations of visual presentations as “chartjunk” (p. 106). Later he called information displays that appear more like sales pitches than thoughtful analyses “phluff” (2006, p. 26). Chartjunk and phluff “often weaken verbal and spatial reasoning” and also serve to “corrupt statistical reasoning,” said Tufte (2006, p. 3).

3. ENGAGE: What Are the Most Influential Documents in America’s Multicultural History?

In 2003, the National Archives, in conjunction with National History Day and U.S. News & World Report magazine, conducted a People’s Vote to determine the most influential documents in United States history. Some 39,000 people voted, online and by paper ballot. Based on the results, the documents were ranked from 1 to 100. The Declaration of Independence was first, followed by the Constitution, the Bill of Rights, the Louisiana Purchase Treaty, and the Emancipation Proclamation. Here is the entire list: The Results of the People's Vote: The Most Influential Documents in American History.

Would the list and the vote have been different if people had been asked to choose America’s most influential multicultural documents? Multicultural documents are those speeches, laws, books, declarations, and other sources that positively impact and feature the lives and freedoms of African Americans, Native Americans, women, Latinos, LBGTQ individuals, and other ostracized groups.
