Gendered Language in Media Coverage of Women in Politics

How many times have you heard the statement “You Guys” spoken almost automatically as part of everyday language, as though everyone present is a member of one gender? To object to the statement seems hopeless. Few speakers take the time to use gender-inclusive or gender-neutral terms such as “folks,” “everybody,” “friends,” “ya’ll,” or “team.”

Yet, words, and the meanings we assign to them, matter hugely in how people think and act not only in everyday conversations, but in how the media covers women and men in politics. Consider how the media writes and talks differently about political campaigns and job performances of women and men in government positions such as mayor, representative, senator, or judge. A commitment to equality under the law and justice for all is harder to sustain when the words used are specific to a male gender.
Does language use by the media impact people's attitudes and behaviors? Does it matter if news reports or reporters say "policemen" or "law enforcement officers" or "firemen" or firefighters" or if they describe women and men in politics differently?

A recent cross-national study established that genderless language or gender-inclusive language combats negative stereotypes toward women while promoting broader career opportunities for females in traditionally male-dominated fields, including politics (Perez & Tavits, 2019).

In this activity, you will examine the use of gendered language in media coverage of women in politics while envisioning how people's views might develop if more genderless language were used instead in politics and in everyday interactions in schools and society.
Activity 1: Examine the use of Gendered Language in the Media

- Choose a particular woman in politics, a specific election, or a specific political job where women’s presence is still minimal/rare (e.g., Hillary Clinton and the 2008 or 2016 election; Elizabeth Warren, Kamala Harris, or Amy Klobuchar and the 2020 election; or the women of the Supreme Court - Sandra Day O'Connor, Ruth Bader Ginsburg, Sonia Sotomayor, Elena Kagan, Amy Coney-Barrett).
- Conduct a search for news media (e.g., online articles, videos) that reference the female you selected.
- See how many times and in what context are they:
  - (a) are referred to by their first names;
  - (b) are referred to by their last names;
  - (c) have mentions of their bodies, facial expressions, and/or appearances;
  - (d) are given an infantilizing or insulting nickname.
- Then, conduct counter research. Select a male politician.

- What similarities and differences did you notice between how women and men in politics are presented in the media? Why do you think this is so? How might this influence the general public's thoughts about these individuals?
- Present your analysis in a video, interactive timeline, or paper.
Bonus Media Literacy Activity: Examine the use of Gendered Language on Television Shows and YouTube Channel Streams

- Record how many times the term "You Guys" is said in a single episode of your favorite TV shows or YouTube channel streams.
- Write a PRAISE or PROTEST letter to the producer of the TV show or YouTube Channel Stream creator about the use gendered language or gender-inclusive language.
